

The New Zealand Coordinated Incident Management System (CIMS)

Be aware. Be prepared. Be resilient.

Recent unexpected events in New Zealand have highlighted the need for organisations of all types to have an Emergency Management plan in place. Would your organisation be prepared if the unthinkable happened? Our courses equip individuals and organisations who to prepare for and respond to adverse events.

What is Emergency Management and why is it so important?

The field of Emergency Management is the art and science of managing emergencies and disasters. It involves the organisation and deployment of resources and responsibilities for dealing with all aspects of emergencies. This includes the 4 R's of Emergency Management: risk reduction, readiness to respond, response and recovery .

About the NZ Coordinated Incident Management System

The NZ Coordinated Incident Management System (CIMS) is the framework around which all NZ response agencies develop and implement their emergency management plans. However, today Emergency Management training has moved on from being the realm of frontline emergency services and now includes organisations that either support emergency and disaster response or require emergency management plans within their organisational policies and procedures. From residential aged care facilities, to major construction firms and event centres, CIMS training is an essential part of any company's emergency planning process.

Our training empowers corporates and other organisations

In a world where risk is ever-present, our CIMS training empowers organisations by providing the knowledge and skills they require to make the right decisions and to take action when needed. Our instructors have real world experience that they bring to each programme, supporting you to create a resilient organisation.

Each course is developed specifically around your organisation's Standard Operating Procedures, current emergency management plans, policies, and organisational structure.
